GAME DEVELOPERS CONFERENCE

MARCH 18–22, 2019 | #GDC19

Key timing considerations for public communications kick off

If too early:

- Over what length of time can interest be sustained / built – based on depth of game, possible news/announcements/reveals, assets to share, expected audience engagement levels
 - Recommend mapping this out in advance
- Planned release dates slip, despite best intentions and planning

If too late:

- May not factor in enough time to establish and build awareness and interest

I CAN'T BELIEVE I FORGOT TO MARKET MY GAME!

Don't be this guy

Launch Planning

- Look at expected game release plans for other notable games
 - In similar game category, on platform/channel, AAA
 - Q4
 - Holidays
 - Big sales
 - Summer
- Other, such as
 - Big news, national elections
 - Big sports/entertainment events, etc

Devise Strategy

Multiplayer game with strong community potential

Game with compelling new mechanic, team profile, or other interesting hook(s)

Project that can tap into established / related audience(s)

Game with budget $$$

or other / none of the above?

Overview

- New installment in all-time great gaming series after 10 year hiatus
- Established audience, although fairly dormant
- Different studio developing game for the first time (continuity with original series in a number of areas)

Strategy

- Key content, messaging and timing planning to maximize announcement while addressing potential concerns
- Developed roadmap for best harnessing online traffic dynamics and funnel for this franchise and maximizing revenue conversions

Results

Telltale's highest-selling series at that time (200K+ full seasons), with new peak metrics for pre-order sales volumes, single day product sales and site traffic as well as mailing list subscriber increases

Big Bang Surprise Reveal

Announcement unveiling that included compelling pre-order offer page and trailer, leading to best pre-order sales volumes up to that time

Talk Like a Pirate Day

Tie-in with long-running online celebration

One-Day Episode Giveaway

All-time high traffic day for Telltale

Plus, substantive sales and mailing list subscriber increases (sign-up required for free game)

Cultivated Incremental $ via Merch

As follow up to prior healthy programs for other franchises, developed Telltale's highest grossing merch program to date, with high upsell conversions

Overview

- Medieval city building game from two person team that first met in high school
 - Pete shipped indie Cannon Brawl with different partner, previously worked at Maxis and on Abzu; Michael was at thatgamecompany and EA
 - Moderate sales for Cannon Brawl (won Activision Independent Games competition)

Strategy

- Market fit testing – social media, Fig crowdfunding campaign with small funding goal ($15K finishing funds and to establish base for alpha / beta testing)
- Campaign focused on core targets with compelling assets, paid social media boosts and partner support
- Established audience base, foundation and launching pad which built through successful alpha/beta, “pre-orders”, game release and post release updates

Alpha code to moderately sized YouTuber (100k) after he learned about the game through Steam Greenlight page.

Other streamers saw the video, tried the game and it bubbled up and down the streamer hierarchy.

Bump in videos with each build update when streamers want to try out the new stuff.

Why did it catch on with streamers?

- Game is clear from a thumbnail
- People want to try themselves (“I would have built my tavern over there”)
- Easy to make into a series of videos
- Matched well with the genre specific fan community

Key is viewers have to be able to do something after seeing a video - buy into the alpha through ‘late’ backing with crowd funding campaign, Steam wishlist, newsletter sign up.

Subject: Tron meets iOS in "Octagon", new arcade game out Nov 7 -- want iOS/Mac review copy?

Subject line – get them to take next step and open the email

Hi [name],

Grab their interest

Imagine if the movie Tron had been set within the iOS interface. That’s what you’ll get with Octagon, a minimal arcade game coming to iOS and Mac on November 7. Octagon is a cousin to recent hits Super Hexagon and Boson-X: fast paced, intensely challenging, and unexpectedly beautiful with its colorful yet minimalist graphics. Can we interest you in a review copy?

In Octagon, you’re trapped inside an 8-sided tunnel that never stops moving. Your goal is to survive each 60-second level without falling out. (It would be pretty simple if not for all the speed bumps and gaps in the way...) Flick the screen horizontally to spin the tunnel, flick vertically to flip upside down, and most importantly don’t stop to think—Octagon moves too fast for that! Only super-quick reflexes will get you to the finish line.

Octagon has unlimited, procedurally-generated levels, a trippy visual style influenced by the minimalist iOS aesthetic, and music by electronica artist Sqeezo that keeps the adrenaline pumping. Upon its November 7 release it will sell for $1.99 USD or equivalent, with no in-app purchases to water down the challenge.

You can get an idea of Octagon’s look and feel from this gameplay video:

- Mac App Store: [promo code provided]

If you decide to review the game, we ask that you hold your coverage until 8:00pm Eastern time on November 6.

Thanks!

“I'm not sure any marketing convention can be described as 'reliable', everything is a risk and you can't underestimate the role chance plays. I'm always going to try and mix up the way I talk about our games to the audience, because every game we make is so different, and the landscape out there changes very rapidly.”

- Mike Bithell

Connection to Your Projects

- Game assessment
 - Identify unique game characteristics, potential opportunities
 - Determine strategy, tools, timelines
 - Execute with focus, diligence, persistence
- Build expertise and ideas with input from others
 - Great marketing, community or other programs
 - Identify opportunities with new platforms, tools, channels, innovations (e.g. Twitch, Discord, Epic Store)
- Reassess, tune and refine as needed

Thank You!
