EMBRACING TECHNOLOGICAL LIMITATIONS

Aesthetic of Imperfection

“The grotesque body displays what is imperfect in human form. The fool and the carnival are images of things going ‘wrong’ in life...”

... All this gives birth to laughter, which is thus linked to a deep recognition of human failure and blurs the edges between success and failure that are sharpened by the modern culture of perfection ”
