“Free Speech”

- Do people feel safe or welcome speaking?
- Does your definition only benefit people who:
  - don't fear retaliation,
  - aren't affected by harassment,
  - or have a reduced sense of empathy?
- What kind of culture are you building?

Anonymity is not the problem

- Well
- It's complicated

Why is it important to be proactive?

Community Design is Video Game Design

[Rant] I'm tired of playing comp because of all the toxicity with it. I going on voice chat as a girl playing a healer is just getting old fast

It's really hard for a company to come back from a toxic community

- Building reactive measures can very expensive and taxing on engineering resources
- It disrupts roadmaps and anticipated content
- It can give your community managers and customer support specialists PTSD (yes actually)

okay so what are these great proactive strategies huh

What about AI? Robots can do it!

How about more of a Cyborg Approach?

How? Problem solving across teams!

- Coordination and collaboration across engineering, trust and safety, data science, and community teams.
- For example, using automation to create flagging systems that assist and scale existing community operations work.

How do you know it's working?

Designing Abuse Resistant VR* Games

1. Abuse can be a game design problem
2. Game mechanic creates culture
3. Recognize and take responsibility for the emotions your game mechanics create
4. Empathy hurdles to train and filter players
5. Create strong emotions from main game
6. Create interdependent roles, require reputation to access the cool stuff
7. Reward empathy mechanics vs. the joy of causing others pain
8. Give players and mods powerful feeling tools to protect themselves

Why Bother?

You Own Your Toxicity

Time & $$$

In the long term, we really want to work on systems that encourage positive behavior and reward good players. It really bums us out to spend so much time punishing people for being bad sports. We like making cool, fun game systems -- that's what we do for a living. But because people seem to lack self-control or because people like to abuse anonymity and free speech we're put in a position of spending a tremendous amount of our time and resources policing the community. We will do this as it is our responsibility but we'd like to spend more time rewarding good players rather than having to focus on poor sportsmanship and unacceptable bad behavior so much. Like it or not, this is an "us, the OW community problem" and not just an "OW team problem". For better or for worse, we're in this together.

We're working hard to make changes. I hope you all do too.
